Through Jairangam, theatre has been given its due in the spotlight via a cross-interactive platform between regional, national and international performers-actors, directors, story tellers, scriptwriters, technicians and so on. The core mission of Jairangam is to establish a stage for intercultural exchange by bringing together plays and artists from all around the world under one roof.

Jairangam started with an aim to celebrate diversity and to uplift the theatre scene in Jaipur as well as Rajasthan.

The previous 12 editions proved to be tremendously successful. In view that the dream that Jairangam weaved for Jaipur is now a reality, it plans to weave the same dream for other states in the country, namely Maharashtra, West Bengal, Assam and Karnataka.

Rajesh brings these two far-apart worlds together through stories, games, clothes, and anecdotes as he navigates his way through the daily realities of the caste-based society in India. The piece openly talks about caste-based struggles and nudges the audience to look within and ask - how does caste play a role in our lives?

Men are Innocent, or so they say, while playing the victim card inevitably alleging that Women are guilty as charged! Sakal Jaani he Naath is a folk musical comical satire, adapted from Vasant Deo's Sudama Ke Chawal. It revisits the famed mythological fable about Lord Krishna and his childhood friend Sudama and explores the narrative of the contemporary human situation, man's double standards, and his convoluted mind. The play runs parallel with Narottam Das's Sudamacharit and their verses are sung in folk tunes of Doha, Alha and Behre Tavil

"Hamare hisaab se duniya mein teen hi krantikari huye hain: Karl Marx, Bhagat Singh, aur Pintu Bhaiya". With this begins the fascinating story of Pintu Bhaiya, seen from the eyes of a young Patna boy back in the early 2000's. The Pintu Bhaiya: Notorious gang leader, local legend, and most importantly, a hopeless romantic, desperately in love. Our young, impressionable narrator tells this tale of "love", small-town shenanigans, and displaced identities with humour, satire, and a rare innocence that will warm your heart, make you burst out laughing, and sometimes cry (lekin Pintu bhaiya ne bola hai ki "Rona Nahin Hai!").

"In our society, there's a prevalent malpractice of judging an individual's character based on their physical appearance or attributes. Those who fit into the societal mold are often considered superior, while those with unique features are relegated to inferior status. The play 'Goradhan Ke Jootey' (Goradhan's Shoes) highlights the plight of a girl, Mathra, who doesn't conform to societal norms due to her unusually large feet. The story revolves around Mathra's wedding, arranged by her grandfather in her childhood. As the wedding approaches, both families face a dilemma: finding shoes to fit Mathra's large feet. This seemingly trivial issue snowballs into a massive problem, reflecting the societal pressures and prejudices. During the search for shoes, the narrative touches upon various themes: gender-based discrimination, domestic violence, and the constraints faced by women. Mathra's aunt, who escaped an abusive marriage and started anew in Delhi, represents the struggles of women seeking independence. As the story unfolds, Mathra's dreams of becoming a basketball player are revealed. However, she had sacrificed her aspirations to maintain family honor and fulfill her grandfather's promise. The play poignantly portrays the clash between traditional expectations and individual desires. The climax revolves around Mathra's refusal to marry, citing her selection in the national basketball team. She asserts her right to wear shoes that fit her, symbolizing her desire for self-expression and freedom. Deepu, the groom, supports Mathra's decision, and together they defy societal norms. Goradhan's Shoes becomes a metaphor for the couple's quest for a better society, where individuals can think freely and live without constraints. They're not abandoning their responsibilities or family but seeking to break free from the societal prison that restricts their growth."

"Rashmirathi" is an exceptional literary work written by the esteemed Indian poet Ramdhari Singh 'Dinkar.' Our adaptation brings this epic poem to life on stage, offering audiences a unique and immersive experience. The narrative of "Rashmirathi" revolves around the life of the legendary character Karna, a pivotal figure from the Indian epic, the Mahabharata. The title, "Rashmirathi," meaning "The Sun's Charioteer," is a homage to Karna, the valiant son of Surya, the Sun god, celebrated for his valor and generosity. The play delves deep into Karna's journey, from his humble beginnings as an abandoned child to becoming a central figure in the Kurukshetra War, where he allies with the Kauravas against his own brothers, the Pandavas. "Rashmirathi" meticulously captures the inner conflicts and moral dilemmas faced by Karna, his unwavering loyalty to his dear friend Duryodhana, and his relentless pursuit of his true heritage. The play explores themes of duty, destiny, friendship, and the profound consequences of life-altering choices.

Chauthi Cigarette is a compelling exploration of desire and ambition, probing the lengths to which individuals will go to fulfill their dreams. The narrative unfolds around two contrasting figures—Vireshwar Sengupta and Samrendu Sanyal—whose intertwined fates illuminate the complexities of success and fulfillment. Vireshwar Sengupta is a humble Bengali writer whose pen dances across the pages of newspaper columns, eking out a modest existence. With his modest means, he juggles the responsibilities of supporting his wife and three children in their simple, middle-class life. His dreams, though restrained by financial constraints, are rich with creativity and potential. In stark contrast, Samrendu Sanyal is a wealthy industrialist, the epitome of affluence and influence. Yet, despite his immense success in the business realm, he harbors a burning desire to be acknowledged as a writer. To achieve this, he conspires to obtain Vireshwar's brilliant literary creations, publishing them under his own name to win the prestigious Booker Prize. This act of literary appropriation not only brings Samrendu the acclaim he craves but also secures Vireshwar a financial windfall through royalties. The crux of the play lies in the juxtaposition of their achievements and the subsequent emotional toll. While Vireshwar's works bring Samrendu the coveted prize and elevate his status, the stolen glory leaves Samrendu hollow and discontent. Simultaneously, Vireshwar's newfound financial stability does little to satiate his yearning for recognition and creative fulfillment. In the end, both men reach their goals but find themselves ensnared in a web of dissatisfaction and unhappiness. The play poignantly underscores the irony of their circumstances, where the pursuit of ambition leads not to contentment, but to an unsettling void.

"Thirty Days in September" written by Mahesh Dattani delves into themes of love and betrayal within the confines of a family, addressing the sensitive issue of child sexual abuse and its profound effects on the victim's life and personality. The play vividly portrays Mala's plight, a victim ensnared by intrigue, silence, and societal indifference. Despite her outward façade as a resilient modern businesswoman, Mala grapples with inner conflict, attributing her woes to her mother, Shanta, who retreats into prayers. Amidst their conflict, Vinay and Deepak, two seemingly similar yet contradictory personalities, offer support. While one seeks to unmask evil at the cost of love, the other pursues selfish motives. The shocking climax of "Thirty Days in September" reveals who is the honest friend, the emotional manipulator, and the true victim.

An exploration of free will, war and mathematics. From the Simonyi Professor for the Public Understanding of Science at Oxford University comes a ground-breaking new play The Axiom of Choice. Eminent mathematician Andre Weil is on a journey from France to India, Finland and beyond, to discover whether we really have free will or if all our choices are predetermined. Expect mathematics, movement but most of all the true story of how one man dodged death on more than one occasion. Imprisoned in Rouen during the Second World War, Weil faces a choice that will determine his fate - but his decision just doesn't make sense. Is life a mathematical theorem of logical strands? Because sometimes it just doesn't add up. This is Marcus' second work to be performed in India, following I is a Strange Loop. Most recently he has published his seventh book - Around the World in 80 Games, which has just been released in paperback. 90 minutes | gujarati, marathi, hindi, english

cast and crew: Kulvindar Bakshish Singh, Abhishek Narayan, Chetan Dhawale, Vinita Joshi, Noyrika Bhatheja, Chandni Srivastava

This narrative, often overlooked, delves into the magnanimity and tragedy of a figure navigating survival, compassion, and parenthood in anonymity. It explores existential struggles, ethical dilemmas, and unwavering adherence to truth, sincerity, and commitment amidst moral ambiguity. Karn, a key figure from the Mahabharata, anchors this tale, embodying human conflict and resilience. The story juxtaposes the harrowing realities of warfare with the fleeting nature of contemporary truths, urging reflection on moral relativity. Crafted with precision, the play features three female actors portraying multiple characters, enriched by indigenous folk arts like Mayurbhanj Chau, Manipuri martial arts, Thang-Ta, and Kalaripayattu. Karn emerges as more than a character, acting as a prism through which the complexities of the human condition are refracted, inspiring introspection and empathy.
